MEMORANDUM FOR: Cpecial Support Assistant, DEA

PRCM:

Director of Date Processing

SUBJECT:

Cover-in-Separation Guidelines. (S)

PEPEPENCE:

Your meno 6th 21 Dec, same subject.

- 1. The draft guidelines proposed in the attachment to reference are, in my view, guite inadequate. The problem is far more complex than these guidelines seem to recognize, whether the subject is viewed from the point of view of the organization of the point of view of the individual employee. Indeed, to be effective, the guidelines should reflect the needs of both organization and individual. (6)
- 2. I find the language loose and ill defined and internally inconsistent. For example, having specifically stated that "separation" is to be used instead of "retirement" in order to make the quidelines more general, the draft continues to make the of the word "retirement." A number of other terms are used which appear to need definition, as in the first paragraph where "other elements concerned" are alluded to. What elements are these, the employee will wonder, and nost particularly, what significance will be attached to the preferences of organizations "cutside the Agency?" Does this imply that cover organizations will have final control over the Cover-in-Separation decision? (f)
- 3 The term "post employment" in this context clearly means "post Agency employment" but the potential for simunderstanding remains when one considers that other kinds of employment are likely after separation from CIA. Fould not the phrase "after separation" be preferable? (6)

5. Shat constitutes "long term?" The vaqueness of the phrase may make many readers uncasy. (5)

- 6. Now will the review panel chaired by the Director of Personnel be constituted? Can the employee expect someone from his own chain of command to speak for him on such a panel? Will be have direct and personal access to that panel? (5)
- 7. Pinelly, the quidelines are deficient in neglecting to provide any reference to the weight which will be given to the amployee's personal preferences. They also full to make clear how the quidelines will be applied to individuals whose cover experience predates the adoption of the quidelines. A "grandfather" clause should be included for those employees whose Summaries of Agency Employment were approved prior to the issuance of the quidelines. Employees with intermittent cover who have conducted themselves as overtemployees in accordance with present cover policy should also be exempted. (5)
- issued by the cover task force on 16 November 1901 (copy attached). This report appears to be the impetus for the 21 December guidelines, but its mossage has been largely overlooked. When the guidelines are insued they should:
 - a. Address all the recommendations in paragraph 6 of the 16 November report, as well as b. Address the "employee perceptions" issues cited in paragraph 3 of that report, and c. Address the cover verification procedures described in paragraph 4. (8)
- 9. When the guidelines, modified to wake them more imipful to the employee, are finelly promulgated. I hope an effort will be made to communicate some organizational concern for the problems created for the employee by imposing cover status upon him. In the past we have considered cover as one of those "givens" about which relatively few questions were ached, at least as far as the fature implications of cover decisions were concerned. We should be thinking about a far more carefully constructed contractual relationship in which joint organizational and individual commitments are carefully recorded so that the true costs of cover can be weighed while there is still time to influence the selection of that cover.
